Grammar

Describing something in Toki Pona is as simple as adding words to the end of it. Whether you're talking about a noun or a verb, you can simply tack on more words to be more specific:

pan suli	Big bread
lipu mute	Many pages
nasin sewi	Upwards path
nasin anpa	Stairs that go down

Toki pona sentences begin with a subject. After that, the "li" particle means that the next thing coming up is the verb. After that, the "e" particle means that the next thing coming up is the object. In summary, the basic format for a sentence in Toki Pona is:

Subject li Verb e Object

"ona li moku e pan"	They eat bread.
"ni li pona!"	This is good!

Particles are the building blocks for sentences in Toki Pona. They are small words that have no meaning on their own. They serve to give context to the other words in the sentence. Here are some of the basic particles:

en	Introduces a new subject	"moku en telo li suli"	Food and water are important.
li	Marks an upcoming verb	"soweli li utala"	Animals fight.
e	Marks an upcoming object	"soweli li utala e sowelí ante"	Animals fight other animals.
la	Joins sentences, suggests cause-effect relationship	"mi moku e telo la, mi pilin pona mute!"	I drank water, so I'm feeling good!
pi	Creates groupings in a noun phrase	tomo suli pi kama sona	A big building for becoming knowledgeable
o	Indicates command or wish	"o lape pona"	Sleep well!
o	Addresses someone	"jan Tolunekо o!"	Yo, Toneko!

Important Stuff

There are many possible interpretations to things that are written or spoken in Toki Pona. The language is able to have few words because of the flexibility in meaning. But this also means context becomes much more important! For example, consider ordering a drink:

In a Coffee Shop (you are human)	"mi wile jo e telo wawa pi suwi ala."	I want a strong coffee with no sugar.
In a Robo Shop (you are robot)	"mi wile jo e telo wawa pi suwi ala."	I want some strong oil with no sugar.

The language is evolving as time passes. One thing that makes Toki Pona fun to speak comes from the fact that anything one might talk about is derived from the original base language. Listening to others speak about a new topic is a treat that anything you'll quickly understand what they're saying, despite you never previously contemplating a way of speaking about the topic in Toki Pona.

Also there are a few little grammar quicks that you'll have to look up later. This early version of the booklet doesn't cover everything. For now though, just remember that if a sentence starts with a subject that is "mi" or "sina" and nothing else, you omit the "li" particle.

Small Phrases

Saying "Hello!" is one of the most universal ways to get people to like you. In Toki Pona, it's as simple as saying "toki!" The word, "toki," means "communicate." But it also can be used to say "hello!"

jan Toluneko:	"toki."	Hello.
jan Luwa:	"toki!"	Hello!

Saying "Thank you" is another good thing to do. In Toki Pona, the word "pona" means "good." But it can also be used to mean "thanks."

jan Toluneko:	"a, sina pona!"	Hey, you're good!
jan Luwa:	"pona!"	Thanks!

Saying "Goodbye" is the classic way to gracefully exit a social encounter. In Toki Pona, "mi tawa" can mean "I'm going." This might sound abrupt at first, but an important part of the spirit of Toki Pona is communicating the core of what you mean. The consequence of this is that politeness implied by default:

jan Toluneko:	"mi tawa"	I'm going.
jan Luwa:	"o tawa pona!"	Safe travels!

"How are you?" is a common thing to be asked, and at times it can be difficult to know how to anwer. Let's look at some examples of navigating this question:

jan Toluneko:	"sina pilin seme?"	How are you feeling?
① jan Luwa:	"pona."	Good.
② jan Luwa:	"ike ala."	Not bad.
③ jan Luwa:	"mi wile lape."	I want to sleep.
④ jan Luwa:	"mi lon."	Existing.

jan Toluneko:	"sina pali e seme?"	What are you doing?
① jan Luwa:	"pona."	Good.
② jan Luwa:	"mi moku"	Eating.
③ jan Luwa:	"mi pali mani"	Working at my job.
④ jan Luwa:	"mi pali ala"	Nothing.

What is Toki Pona?

Toki Pona is a constructed language invented by Canadian linguist, Sonja Lang. It was created in 2001 as a personal challenge to see if it was possible to describe the human experience in 120 words. After posting it online, learners of the language began exploring its boundaries and speaking it too. The first official book describing the language came out in 2014. The dictionary in this booklet is largely based on that book.

Languages around the world form the inspiration for Toki Pona. The word "toki" comes from the word "tok" a language called Tok Pisin, spoken in Papua New Ginuea. "kala" comes from the Finnish word for fish. The grammar for yes/no questions comes from Mandarin.

Speakers around the world are learning Toki Pona today! In the USA, Europe, and Japan too! Toki Pona is for me and you! Platforms like Discord and VRChat have hundreds of speakers. And you can join the conversation at the toki.social Mastodon instance!

Learning Toki Pona takes the shortest amount of time out of any other spoken language. Open the dictionary and memorize the 120 words. Read the original book for the dozen grammar rules. Then start practicing your listening and speaking!

Toki Pona fluency is less about learning new words and grammar. Instead it's about contemplating new ways of using what you already know! If you've ever been turned off by memorizing and wanted to try speaking immediately, Toki Pona might be for you!
